

THE OLD SOLDIERS AT RICHMOND.

THE JEFFERSON DAVIS ARCH UNVEILED.
A GRAND TIME WAS HAD.

Richmond, Va., June 3.—The capital of Virginia to-day resumed the glory of the time when it was the capital of a nation with an ambition that was world-wide. As the monument to Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederate States of America, was unveiled men who had fought for that nation's Lost Cause stood with hair grayer than their old uniforms to hear the eulogy of their dead President and the principles he represented.

"Not in hostility to others, not to injure any section of the country, not even for our own pecuniary benefit, but from the high and solemn motive of protecting the rights we inherited and which it is our duty to transmit unshorn to our children."

In these, the words of Jefferson Davis spoken before the United States Senate on June 21, 1861, was the cause of the Confederacy presented before the ex-soldiers of gray, the men who had sacrificed for that cause. These words of President Davis were inscribed on the monument that was unveiled, they were reproduced in the speech of the day, and found echoes in the breast of veterans who fought for State's rights which they believed in as a matter of right, and failed to sustain in might.

Children of Richmond, three thousand strong, had drawn the monument to its place through two miles of spectators, just as children of that city had drawn to its place in Capitol Square the monument to George Washington, the first President of the United States of America, whom Virginia gave to her country.

More happy still was the scene to-day in which the Confederate veterans were the spectators, the guests of honor at a reunion that was larger than many held in recent years.

While their ranks have been thinning, the veterans and their families have been growing richer, more prosperous than they had believed that they would ever be when the dark cloud of reconstruction had settled like a storm upon the fair Southland. And so they were able to return to this unveiling, which will go down in history as the memorial event in the story of the Confederacy as it lives in the hearts of Dixie.

Gen. Clement A. Evans, of Georgia, made the principal address of the day. When the veil was drawn from the monument eyes were lifted upward from the statue of Jefferson Davis to the figure that crowned the pillar in the center of the colonnade. This is the allegorical figure of a woman, known as "Vindictrix," representing the spirit of the South. At the base of this pillar and on a pedestal five feet high is the bronze figure of Mr. Davis, eight feet in height.

The inscription on the pedestal is:

JEFFERSON DAVIS,
Exponent of Constitutional Principles,
Defender of State Rights.

On each side of the pedestal are inscriptions, the one on the left reading: "As Citizen, Soldier, Statesman, he Enhanced the Glory, the Fame of the United States. When his Allegiance to that Government was terminated by his Sovereign State, as President of the Confederacy, he exalted his Country before the Nations."

On the right side of the pedestal is inscribed: "With constancy and courage unsurpassed he sustained the heavy burden laid upon him by the people. When their cause was lost, with dignity he met defeat, with fortitude he met imprisonment and suffering, with entire devotion he kept the faith."

The sentiment of Jefferson Davis expressed in the United States Senate that is quoted above, will be inscribed on the architrade at the top of the colonnade.

A deep and solemn hush prevailed over the great assembly as the beauty of the group came upon them. The red and blue of flags, the music, the crowds, the gaily, the joy of meeting comrades had prevailed in the encampment of old veterans until this time, but in the presence of this message of grief and pride from the old South to the new, the message of patriotism, bravery and proud grief, preserved in stone and bronze, under the imagination of a master hand, the old soldiers remembered the old South, the comrades who fell before the guns in that mad, brave contest for what they believed the right.

There were many things that had reminded the old soldiers of the early days of their enlistment that seemed barely forty-seven years in the past. On the walls of the Jefferson Hotel, in the halls of the Confederates, a calendar which reproduced the flag of every State in the Confederacy was hung. At the top of this emblem was the flag of Georgia of blue, with the seal of the State upon it in white.

The central flag was the Confederate flag officially endorsed by the government of the Confederate States of America. Many of the flags were not in existence to be copied from. But from descriptions the entire list was made out and the sheet of flags is large enough for every soldier to find on it the one under which he enlisted—the palm tree of South Carolina upon blue, surrounded by the crescent; North Carolina's flag giving dates of May 20, 1775, and April 12, 1776, the dates upon which the State declared its independence of England, while there waved at the old two bars, one white, the other blue, and the field held a single white star; Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, Texas, Missouri and Virginia—the beautiful flags were presented in the beauty of color such as they carried before the soil of battle sanctified them.

The reunion has been one of the most notable ever held and upon its last notes being sounded the soldiers will spread over the battlefields they left in the 60's, will visit the graves of old comrades and resume the pleasures of camp life in reminiscence.

"I want to show you the tree behind which I was introduced to musketry," a gray-haired wit told another upon asking his company to a nearby region.

The scenes have changed! On cross-roads, where the soldiers saw graves and desolated cottages, there have sprung up happy villages. The fields of uncultivated land, over which they tramped wearily, now bear the promise of early fruitage of grain and cotton. The little towns that were so gray and desolate at the close of the war between the States are now happy little cities with the buzz of a life that has left the cloud of war far behind, though in every Virginia hamlet, at every cross roads, in the heart of every son and daughter of the Old Dominion, is carried the sacred memories of the struggle that the old soldiers might think, superficially, was told of only by the scars and wounds they bear upon their bodies.

The soldiers will separate, happier for the re-union, and march over old fields in boyish fashion for all their feeling of age. They have been given in Virginia the welcome of their lives, and go home feeling again that they played an important part in the world's history, better for the honor that has been paid them, and with a happy memory for years to come.

The city of Charlottesville, Va., has gone "dry," by a majority of 40 votes, after the warmest fight in the history of the city. Ministers stood at the polls all day in the rain. Church bells were rung every hour. The election took place on June 4th.

For Solicitor.

Although the election is many months off, already has the political pot, as far as the office of Solicitor is concerned, begun to boil. It is understood that Solicitor Boggs will be a candidate for Congress against Wyatt Aiken in the next election and there are at least four persons in this judicial district who have the political bee buzzing in their heads for the place now occupied by Solicitor Boggs.

As everybody knows, the Tenth Judicial District comprises Anderson, Greenville, Oconee and Pickens counties. Of the four alleged candidates, Anderson claims two and Greenville claims the other two, or maybe Anderson and Greenville claim jointly one of them. The gentleman we refer to is Proctor Bonham, who was until recently a resident of Anderson, and who now lives in Greenville. He is now a law partner of Col. B. A. Morgan, who is considered one of the best lawyers in Greenville. Col. Morgan was the leader of the anti-dispensary crowd in the Legislature two years ago and was the author of the well-known Morgan bill. Mr. Bonham's friends are urging him to come forward and announce himself for the place and his many friends and admirers in this county will no doubt be pleased to know that it is probable that he will acquiesce and be a candidate.

The other Anderson candidate, or who is being mentioned for the place, is Court Stenographer M. C. Long. Mr. Long is well-known throughout the district and he will doubtless make an excellent race should he decide to enter. Mr. Long has been the stenographer for this district many years and he is perfectly familiar with the duties of the Solicitor and is well versed in law.

The two Greenville alleged candidates are: J. J. McSwain and E. M. Blythe. Mr. McSwain is a good "mixer" with the people and is popular. He stands strong with the secret orders in this part of the State. Major Blythe is a young lawyer of the Mountain City and has built up a nice practice. He is also United States Commissioner and will make a good race to succeed Solicitor Boggs.

The race for Solicitor next year is going to be interesting principally because such strong men are apt to be in the race. It is very probable that other good men will also be in the race. It will be a hard matter to pick the winner before the election comes off.—Anderson Mail, June 6.

The Pain Family

You know them; they are numerous, and make their presence felt everywhere. The names of the family are Headache, Toothache, Earache, Backache, Stomach ache, Neuralgia, etc. They are sentinels that warn you of any derangement of your system. When the brain nerves become exhausted or irritated, Headache makes you miserable; if the stomach nerves are weak, indigestion results, and you double up with pain, and if the more prominent nerves are affected, Neuralgia simply makes life unendurable. The way to stop pain is to soothe and strengthen the nerves. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills do this. The whole Pain family yield to their influence. Harmless if taken as directed.

"I find Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills an excellent remedy for overcoming headache, neuralgia and distressing pains of all sorts. I have used them for the past seven years in this capacity with the best of results."

Judge Bleckley's Will Probated.

Clarksville, Ga., June 5.—The will of the late Judge Logan E. Bleckley was probated in solemn form in the Court of Ordinary of Habersham county yesterday. The instrument is brief, clear and unambiguous—just such a paper as one would think he would prepare. It is in his own handwriting and dated June 10, 1901. Written at Clarksville and witnessed by Messrs. J. A. Erwin, J. L. York and M. C. York, and the codicil was written in Atlanta and witnessed by Mrs. M. L. Jones, Mrs. E. A. Bostrum and Robert E. Bostrum, and dated December 24, 1902.

The will names his wife, Mrs. Chloe H. Bleckley, as executrix, and after providing for the payment of debts and the selection by his older children of certain books and other keepsakes, leaves all his property to his widow.

A remarkable thing in the will is the provision for the payment of two sums of money that he collected before the war for clients and which have never been called for. The will sets out the amounts of these two collections and states that his fee has been retained.

The codicil provides that in case he dies possessed of any patent right or copyright, that same should belong to his widow and children share and share alike.

The instruments were offered for probate by Mrs. Bleckley through her attorneys, Messrs. McMillan & Erwin.

The Pythian Journal Board.

The Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias, during its annual session at Anderson last week, decided to establish a Pythian Journal. The lodge authorized Grand Chancellor Mendel L. Smith to appoint a board to publish this journal and he has accordingly appointed the following gentlemen: Elbert H. Aull, of Newberry, chairman; Past Grand Chancellor, D. C. Heyward, of Columbia, and M. Rutledge Rivers, of Charleston; J. Thomas Arnold, of Greenville, and J. F. Williams, of Columbia. The Journal will probably be published in Columbia.

Dentist Charged with Murder.

Newberry, June 10.—C. C. Armstrong, the young itinerant dentist, who was held a few days ago by the coroner's jury on the charge of murder, it being alleged that an anesthetic, used to deaden the pain of tooth-extraction, caused the death of Mrs. Carrie M. Berry, has been granted bail in the sum of one thousand dollars. The application for bail was made before Judge Klugh at Abbeville.

The bond was promptly arranged, and the young man was released from the custody of the sheriff, where he has been since the death of Mrs. Berry.

Little But Loud.

It will be remembered that last fall Joseph J. Fretwell's name was mentioned in the bunch who would probably oppose Senator Lattimer for U. S. Senator. He is keeping quiet, but if he should decide to make the race he is the man the whole crew will have to beat. Joe Fretwell is a man who does things, and while no giant in stature, yet he is the biggest little man in the State.—Anderson Intelligencer.

Scarcity of Cotton.

Atlanta, Ga., June 3.—Through a prominent broker a Georgia cotton mill has just ordered 500 bales of cotton shipped back from Liverpool for use in the mill. It cost two cents per pound above the market price here, but it is said the order was placed on account of the scarcity of raw-spinnable cotton here.
